Riders rough up Argos to keep win streak alive

Make that three in a row. Green and White's perfect record still stands as Durant hits Smith with two long TD passes in 39-28 win in Toronto

Darian Durant threw three touchdown passes, including two long ones to Taj Smith, to lead the Saskatchewan Roughriders past the Toronto Argonauts 39-28 on Thursday night.

Durant cemented the win before a disappointing Rogers Centre gathering of 18,211 with a 70-yard TD strike to Smith at 6:51 of the third quarter to put Saskatchewan (3-0) comfortably ahead 29-14. Durant also found a wide-open Smith on a 61-yard touchdown pass in the opening half.

Durant finished 14-of-19 passing for 245 yards before suffering a foot injury and being replaced by Drew Willy with 9:52 remaining. But running back Kory Sheets anchored the victory, surpassing the 100-yard rushing plateau for the third consecutive contest with 178 yards and two TDs.

Sheets, who had three 100-yard games last year, has rushed for career highs in the first three weeks of the season.

Toronto (1-2) made it interesting early in the fourth when Ricky Ray hit Chad Kackert on a 48-yard touchdown pass to cut its deficit to 32-21. But the defending Grey Cup champions still suffered their second straight loss despite Ray finishing 27-of-37 passing for 334 yards and two TDs.

Rob Bagg had Saskatchewan's other touchdown. Chris Milo added the converts and a field goal while Ricky Schmitt booted a single.

Andre Durie and Zach Collaros scored Toronto's other touchdowns. Noel Prefontaine kicked the converts, two field goals and a single.

South Saskatchewan River still not safe: Fire officials

Precaution. Boat launches remain closed as the Saskatoon Fire and Protective Services says river is still dangerously high

alyssa.mcdonald@metronews.ca

With the mercury on the thermometer continuing to rise in the summer sun, water sports are on the minds of many Saskatonians.

But boat launches remain closed as the Saskatoon Fire and Protective Services says the South Saskatchewan River is still dangerously high.

"There are a lot of inquiries about using the river right now because it's down from what it was, but there still is an increased flow," said Bill Coffin, assistant chief for communications and community relations with the Saskatoon Fire and Protective Services.

"It looks great out there and everything, but we just can't state or advise the city to open up the boat launches yet."

The launches will open to the public once the safety buoys can be placed back in the river.

The cables to the buoys broke when the water hit its peak this year.

"It's a river current and if somebody got in trouble without the safety buoys out there, they will be down in the weir in a couple of minutes," Coffin said.

The buoys can be safely put in only after the river lowers to 400 cubic metres per second. Right now the river is still flowing at about 600 cubic metres, which is still higher than normal for this time of year.

"The river is near the top of the ramp where normally there would be an extra 15 to 20 feet of ramp sitting there," Coffin said of the public launch near the Broadway Bridge.

He was unsure when the boat launches will reopen, and said it's up to city crews to place the safety buoys in the water.

On the web

The City of Saskatoon says it will be placing updates on the river on its website: saskatoon.ca.

Suspect sought in armed robbery

Saskatoon police are investigating an armed robbery at a restaurant in the 2900 block 8th Street East.

A staff member called police at approximately 11 p.m. Wednesday night to report that a man armed with a knife had come in through the back door and demanded money.

The man stole the cash box and fled on foot to Lindsay Place, where he was seen getting into a car and driving away.

The suspect is described as six-foot-two, wearing a black mask, black gloves and a grey hoodie and black pants. The vehicle is described as a small, black newer-model car with a dim or burned-out tail light on the right-hand side.

No one was injured during the incident.

Anyone with information is asked to contact the Saskatoon Police Service at 975-8300 or Crime Stoppers at 1-800-222-8477. METRO

Amber Alert case. Boy convicted of abducting pregnant girl is sentenced

One of the teenage boys who abducted a pregnant girl in Saskatchewan has been sentenced to three months of deferred custody and nine months of probation in Maple Creek.

Deferred custody is like a conditional sentence for an adult and means the boy will be supervised in the community.

The boy — who can't be identified under the Youth Criminal Justice Act — pleaded guilty last month to abducting a person under 16.

In January, a pregnant 14-year-old girl was forcibly taken from her family's home in Maple Creek by her boyfriend and the boy who was sentenced on Thursday.

Oath to the Queen of Canada 'repulsive'

Forcing would-be Canadians to pledge allegiance to the Queen before they can become citizens is discriminatory and a violation of their rights, three permanent residents are set to argue in court on Friday.

The Citizenship Act requires applicants for citizenship to swear or affirm they will be "faithful and bear true allegiance to Queen Elizabeth the Second, Queen of Canada, her heirs and successors."

The requirement "effectively bars" the applicants from enjoying citizenship rights such as voting or obtaining a Canadian passport given their constitutionally protected beliefs, their application to Ontario Superior Court states.

One of the applicants, Michael McAteer, says his father was persecuted in Ireland for supporting Irish independence.

"Taking an oath of allegiance to a hereditary monarch who lives abroad would violate my conscience," McAteer says.

Simone Topey says swearing allegiance to the Queen — whom Rastafarians regard as the "head of Babylon" — would violate her beliefs.

Dror Bar-Natan maintains the Queen is a symbol of entrenched privilege and taking the oath would be "repulsive."

For its part, the federal government argues that the three are in Canada voluntarily, and their political and religious views enjoy constitutional protections.

That they cannot have the "convenience" of a Canadian passport or the right to vote is a small price to pay for adhering to their principles.

"It is not constitutionally inconsistent that the applicants who find Canada's foundational democratic political structure to be 'repugnant,' at least in parts, are not accorded the right to vote within that political system," it states.

"The inability to enjoy the benefits of citizenship ... are amongst the costs reasonably borne by individuals whose personal beliefs run counter to Canada's foundational heritage." THE CANADIAN PRESS

Drug trade. Canadian crooks dealing directly with Mexican mobsters

Canadian organized-crime groups have forged links with Mexican outlaws in an attempt to secure a direct supply of cocaine and increase their profits by eliminating the middleman, the RCMP says.

An internal analysis by the Mounties notes that since 2008 at least 10 Canadians have been shot or killed in Mexico under circumstances suggesting involvement with local criminal elements.

Some were known to be active in drug trafficking in Canada and all had extensive criminal backgrounds, the RCMP analysis says.

A copy of the May 2012 assessment — heavily censored — was released under the Access to Information Act.

The murder in Mexico of several Canadians with criminal connections may signal that Canadian disputes and retaliatory actions are making their way south — contrary to the popular perception that drug-cartel frictions are migrating north, the RCMP's companion report says.

The Mounties map out various scenarios — all of which were withheld from release — as to what may be happening in this vein. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Train engineer a hero or criminal?

Lac-Mégantic disaster. Man hailed for valiant actions now suspended and under suspicion

His face gripped with terror, the train driver sprang out of bed at the inn where he'd retired for the night and raced to the scene of an impending catastrophe.

Residents of Lac-Mégantic, Que., painted a portrait Thursday of the friendly railman who chatted with locals during his regular stopovers in town.

An employee at the inn says she thinks she was looking into his eyes the instant he realized his unmanned, crude-oil-filled train had just slammed into the downtown core.

The train driver, Tom Harding, now finds himself at the centre of the investigation into a derailment disaster now feared to have killed 50 people.

His boss has said he could face criminal charges.

The chairman of the rail company has suspended Harding without pay amid concerns that he might not have properly applied the brakes on the tanker train.

The company had initially described Harding as a hero for apparently rushing to the scene where he managed to pull some of the explosive rail cars away from the flames.

A taxi driver met Harding on Friday night at the spot where he parked the train before it roared into town. He said his regular customer seemed fine.

However, Andre Turcotte did say that the train appeared to be belching out more smoke than usual, so much so that he recalled oil droplets from the exhaust landing on his car.

He said he asked Harding twice about the smoke. Turcotte said his client calmly responded that he had followed company directives to deal with it. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Walmart Canada issued a statement on its Facebook page just before noon Thursday saying that it is a major supporter of animal rights and denying the termination was over the employee's move to confront the customer.

"We want you to know that the associate in question was absolutely not let go for trying to help a dog in a locked car. The decision to dismiss an associate is one that we take extremely seriously and must follow a comprehensive process," the statement said. "As per our protocol, the store manager did speak to the customer in question about the dangers of leaving a dog in a hot car."

The former employee, Carla Cheney, a pharmacy technician, said she called police Tuesday when she saw a man leave his dog in a truck in the parking lot. She said the SPCA had advised her to call 911 after a similar incident that happened at the store a week earlier.

We liked their early stuff better? Belugas to see another concert

Two Winnipeg artists are on the northernmost edge of Manitoba this summer to organize a concert series that promises to really whale.

Laura Magnusson and Kaoru Ryan Klatt left for Churchill last week with a specially crafted "sculptural sea vessel" — complete with a stage and an underwater speaker system — to stage performances for thousands of beluga whales on the Churchill River estuary.

"We're fostering ties between humans and belugas," explained Magnusson, who's travelled with Klatt to Churchill for the past two summers to sing and talk to whale pods. "This is the last hurrah, so for 75 days we're going to build a sustained but non-invasive presence on the Churchill River to see what happens."

This trip has grown from the pair's first two trips alone in a canoe with a homemade underwater speaker to include performances by 10 other interdisciplinary artists.

A special underwater microphone will record and play back the response they get from their audience.

"We can hear the whales and have this sort of sonic dialogue," said Magnusson.

Pods of whales can be seen following their boat in videos they've posted to YouTube of their previous trips.

"Maybe this year we can join a whale pod," laughed Magnusson.

Top court to hear cell privacy case

Ottawa. Man arrested for armed robbery says police breached his rights by examining his phone

The Supreme Court of Canada is taking on the question of whether police can access information on a cellphone that isn't protected by a password.

The court has agreed to hear an appeal from Kevin Fearon, who was arrested after an armed robbery in Toronto in 2009.

Police obtained photos of a gun and cash, as well as a text message about jewelry, after taking a closer look at Fearon's phone, which was unlocked. After he was convicted, Fearon appealed, arguing that police breached his rights when they examined the phone after his arrest.

The Ontario Court of Appeal said it was all right for the police to look through the phone in a cursory fashion to see if there was evidence relevant to the crime, but after that they should have stopped to get a search warrant.

Had the phone been password-protected or otherwise locked to anyone other than its owner, "it would not have been appropriate" to look through the phone without a search warrant.

The appeal judges referred to a decision in a murder case in which the judge did not allow evidence from a personal electronic device because it "functioned as a mini-computer," which has a high expectation of privacy.

The contents of that device were only extracted by a police officer using specialized equipment, the judges noted.

"There was no suggestion in this case that this particular cellphone functioned as a 'mini-computer,' nor that its contents were not 'immediately visible to the eye,'" the court said in its ruling.

"Rather, because the phone was not password-protected, the photos and the text message were readily available to other users."

Defence lawyer Sean Robichaud said that approach failed to take into account the amount of information many people keep on their cellphones these days.

THE CANADIAN PRESS

No explanation

- As usual, the Supreme Court justices gave no reasons for agreeing to hear the case.
- Kevin Fearon also appealed over the issue of access to a lawyer, saying he was left in an interview room for five hours without an opportunity to contact counsel.
- The Supreme Court, however, said the appeal will be limited to the cellphone issue.

Royal-kid kitsch. Souvenir makers ready for mad dash

Souvenir plates to mark the forthcoming birth of a baby for Prince William and his wife Kate, Duchess of Cambridge, stand on display in a shop in central London on Wednesday. SANG TAN/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

It's a royal bonanza — but for Britain's souvenir makers, also a royal headache. The upcoming birth of Prince William and his wife Kate's first child is a golden opportunity that comes with a mystery: The name and gender of the baby.

While merchants have known for months that the future heir to the throne is due in mid-July, they'll be sent into a mad dash to create, or at least put finishing touches on, royal baby memorabilia.

Sophie Allport, a designer of fine bone china, is one manufacturer waiting for the future monarch's name to send her commercial plans into motion. She has thousands of pre-orders for hand-crafted commemorative mugs but can't fill them until the baby's name can be etched on the rims.

She's as ready as she can possibly be — having prepared both blue and pink designs depending on whether it's a prince or princess. "We've never done something like this so I hope it works," said Allport, whose designs, once finished, will be scanned, mailed or even driven by courier to the city of Stoke-on-Trent, the centre of Britain's ceramic industry.

Perseverance powers helicopter

Toronto team takes international prize

Two Toronto engineers have just finished setting up their prize-winning helicopter that is powered by Todd Reichert's powerful legs pedalling a bicycle.

Since 1980, a challenge to engineers across the world — to build a human-powered helicopter, capable of sustaining three metres of flight for 60 seconds — had remained unclaimed.

Teams of engineers from Japan to the U.S. came close, but not close enough. Only Reichert's team has fulfilled the seemingly impossible feat, earning it a $250,000 prize Thursday. The award-winning flight took place in June, after 18 months for the University of Toronto alumni to build and fine tune the project. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Crowdfunding site Kickstarter is making its way across the border later this summer — but just 'cause us Canucks can't start our own funding projects yet, doesn't mean we can't contribute. Since Kickstarter is generally home to the nerdy entrepreneur, we sorted through what new tech they're coming up with. (So you don't have to. You're welcome.)

Plug:

With files stored all over the place from the cloud to your smartphone to your laptop, plug aims to centralize all your info — the brain of your personal info operation if you will. $69 on Kickstarter, $150 retail once it's made.

Wrist Charge:

No more missed texts from dead phones. No more tangled wires. Wrist Charge looks like one of the slash bracelets from the 90s (these ones aren't fluorescent, don't worry) and uses any USB port. $15 on Kickstarter, $29.99 retail.

C.24 Music Keyboard for iPad:

You might not need your iPad to turn into a keyboard, but you might as well. This keyboard acts as a case for the iPad and with the flip of a lever it turns into a piano keyboard. $99 on Kickstarter.

Synopsis

Grown Ups 2 picks up where the last movie left off. Lenny (Adam Sandler in his first ever sequel) has relocated his wife (Salma Hayek) and kids back to his hometown to be closer to friends and family. It's the last day of school, and as the kids are packing up their books, their fathers (Kevin James, Chris Rock, David Spade) grapple with growing up, growing old and a gang of frat boys (lead by Twilight's Taylor Lautner) who think the four old friends are way over the hill.

Reel Guys

RICHARD CROUSE AND MARK BRESLIN

New movie. In the sequel to Grown Ups, the comedy doesn't grow into anything and remains a series of juvenile jokes and potty humour

Richard: Mark, the old saying, "They got bigger, but they didn't grow up," perfectly applies to this new Sandler and Company movie. It's 90 minutes of middle-aged men, urination gags (too many to count) and cleavage shots. So while the actors may have matured (chronologically at least) the jokes haven't. Question is: is it funny? I didn't really think so, although I have to say Shaquille O'Neal's big-guy-Andre-the-Giant shtick made me laugh. You?

Mark: No, I didn't laugh. But let's examine the inventory. Chris Rock may be the funniest stand-up working today, but as a movie star, he's never done anything much worthwhile.

David Spade: Tommy Boy was a long time ago.

Sandler: Well, I only find him funny when he's trying to be serious.

There is only one movie genius here — I'm not kidding — and it's Kevin James. He's the only one of the bunch that can convincingly play a regular guy and not come off like a slumming millionaire. And even then, not in this turkey.

Also you might have to wonder about any sequel that Rob Schneider passes on.

RC: I wondered where Schneider's character was. I guess some friendships don't last forever. I can't say I didn't laugh at all.

James' deadpan dumb kid who can't add or spell is a pretty funny running gag but for a movie about growing up, it was all so juvenile. I didn't expect a searing meditation on aging but I did think they might touch on the fact that they were growing old with more smarts than lines like, "I used to buy 10 cases of beer for my parties, now I get 10 cases of juice boxes."

MB: A good line. I snorted in recognition. And I grudgingly laughed a bit at a few sight gags, like the exploding life raft and some of the '80s outfits at the party finale. But generally, the humour aims too low. But I liked it — if I can use the word — more than the first one. At least it had some nice callbacks and weird twists of coincidence. And it had a lazy summer quality about it, probably the result of lazy screenwriting, acting and direction.

RC: I like silly movies, I just wish it was silly and about something other than a moose urinating on Sandler's unsuspecting family, and by extension, the audience.

MB: We should all feel lucky. In the first draft of the script, it was the other way around.

Science Fiction

Pacific Rim

Director. Guillermo del Toro

Stars. Charlie Hunnam, Idris Elba, Rinko Kikuchi

Director Guillermo del Toro has made an end-of-the-world scenario fun. In Pacific Rim the planet is threatened by Kaijus, colossal beasts with an appetite for destruction. Giant robots called Jaegers, operated by pilots like Raleigh Becket (Charlie "Sons of Anarchy" Hunnam) are the last hope to fight the beasts and save the world. Add to that Ron Perlman in a colourful cameo, huge-scale martial arts and some crazy Roger Corman-esque science theories and you can expect to have a geek freak-out. RICHARD CROUSE

Drama

Renoir

Director. Gilles Bourdos

Stars. Michel Bouquet, Christa Theret

This biopic focuses on famous Impressionist painter Pierre-Auguste Renoir and his legendary filmmaker son Jean Renoir during the height of the First World War. When a model mysteriously arrives at the family estate, she becomes the (persistently naked) muse of both father and son. Renoir may have a slightly staid sense of momentum but an accomplished cast and gorgeous photography lend itself to this tribute to two of France's celebrated geniuses.

Love Is All You Need

Director. Susan Bier

Stars. Pierce Brosnan, Trine Dyrholm

Ida (Dyrholm), a Danish hairdresser, returns home from a final round of chemo to find her husband and his accountant in flagrante. Ida leaves for Italy to attend their daughter's wedding, alone, crushed and yet relieved. She has a meltdown at the airport and crashes into the luxury car of a businessman (Brosnan). Dyrholm is tremendously appealing and Brosnan finds a role that recalls his own experiences with his late wife. Together they're magic.
ANNE BRODIE

Man! I feel like a woman

"It was at that moment I had an epiphany, and I went home and started crying. Talking to my wife, I said 'I have to make this picture,' and she said, 'Why?' And I said, 'Because I think I am an interesting woman when I look at myself on screen. And I know that if I met myself at a party, I would never talk to that character because she doesn't fulfil physically the demands that we're brought up to think women have to have in order to ask them out."

Conjuring up some old-school horror

Patrick Wilson. The actor chats with Metro about his latest horror flick, which was a throwback to the '70s

NED EHRBAR
Metro World News in Hollywood

When it comes to discussing contemporary horror movies, "restraint" isn't usually a word that comes up too often.

But it's one that actor Patrick Wilson keeps coming back to when describing how director James Wan (Saw, Insidious) approached The Conjuring, based on a case file by real-life paranormal investigators Ed Warren (Wilson) and Lorraine Warren (Vera Farmiga).

The irony doesn't escape Wilson that Wan is at least partially responsible for the current state of horror, but against that backdrop, The Conjuring — presented as if it were released during its early 1970s setting — is a throwback in the best possible way.

This movie is seriously terrifying.
Yeah, the movie's no joke. I watched it again last night, and my friend who was with me — who had also seen it with me before — jumped more this time than he did the other time. I kept looking over at him like, "But you know what's coming." I would even look at him right before something happened, and he would look at me like, "I know," and then he'd look back at the screen and he'd still jump.

There's a lot of restraint in how the film sticks to its time period, feeling very much in mood and style like a 1970s film.
James said that to me very early on. It was the '70s without hitting people over the head — with bell bottoms or an episode of Partridge Family or something. Yeah, it's in the '70s and you've got '70s clothes, and you've got the odd "groovy" that the kids say — which they would — and I think it gives people a little frame of reference, but it's not blatant.

It's refreshing to see the older style of making scary movies is still effective.
No disrespect to horror movies from the past 15 years, but when people say, "What are the great horror movies?" you're always drawn to the Exorcist — that movie always comes up as one of maybe three or four that are arguably the best. Those are movies that are rich in character and not overly graphic. The violence is used appropriately, the blood is used appropriately. And I think James has a real affinity for that, which I always admired, especially coming from Saw. He almost started this whole movement, I feel like, with the shock and the gore and everything. But one of the things that struck me about (our previous collaboration) Insidious was the complete opposite of that. And now he's just really hit his stride.

OUR TAKE ON THE WORLD OF CELEBRITIES

Angelina Jolie

War, what is it good for? An Angelina Jolie movie, apparently

Angelina Jolie has her second project as a director all lined up. The actress and activist will be taking on Unbroken, a Second World War drama about former prisoner of war Louie Zamperini, according to Yahoo News. "I've had the privilege of spending a great deal of time with Louie Zamperini, who is a hero of mine, and now — I am proud to say — a dear friend," Jolie says in a statement. "I am deeply honoured to be telling his extraordinary story, and I will do my absolute best to give him the film he deserves." Oscar-winners Joel and Ethan Coen are writing the script, and Jolie was spotted in Hawaii this week scouting locations. Jolie's first film as a director, In the Land of Blood and Honey, was released in 2011.

King of Queens star leaves Church of Scientology

MELINDA TAUB
Metro World News in New York City

King of Queens and The Talk star Leah Remini has left the Church of Scientology. Apparently Remini, who has been a member of the church for many years, grew tired of the organization's habit of cutting off ties with people it deems "suppressive."

"It all began when Leah questioned the validity of excommunication of people," a source told the Post. "She is stepping back from a regime she thinks is corrupt. She thinks no religion should tear apart a family or abuse someone under the umbrella of 'religion.'" Apparently, at Tom Cruise and Katie Holmes's wedding, the actress asked politely where church leader David Miscavige's wife was. It must have been a loaded question, because Remini was slammed with years of "thought modification." Remini is reportedly considering going public, but wants to wait and see what the church is going to do, since they're rumoured to harass those who try to leave.

A crispy nacho is a happy (tasty) nacho

Corn and Steak Grilled Nachos. When they're nuked in the microwave, these little guys die a soggy death. Save a nacho from this sad ending with your barbecue

Before turning on the grill, make sure the baking sheet you plan to use fits on it with the lid down. If it doesn't, you can divide the ingredients into multiple smaller pans. The smaller pans also can be cooked in batches, if needed.

1. In a medium bowl, whisk together the adobo sauce, tomato paste, oil, garlic powder and salt. Add the steak and mix to coat thoroughly. Cover and refrigerate for at least 20 minutes and up to overnight.

2. When ready to cook, heat the grill to medium-high.

3. Rub the corn with a bit of canola oil, then set it on the grill. Cook the corn, turning often, until lightly browned on all sides, about 2 to 3 minutes. Transfer the corn to a plate and set aside until cool enough to handle.

4. Meanwhile, use an oil-soaked paper towel held with tongs to coat the grill grates with oil. Add the steak and grill for 1 to 2 minutes per side, or to desired doneness. Transfer to a plate and set aside. Leave the grill on, but reduce the heat to low.

5. Arrange the tortilla chips in an even layer on a rimmed baking sheet. Spread the steak evenly over the chips.

6. Cut the corn kernels from the cobs. To do this, stand the ear on its wide end, then use a knife to saw down the length of the sides. Scatter the corn kernels over the steak and chips, then scatter the cheese over that. Set the baking sheet on the grill, cover the grill and cook for 7 to 10 minutes, or until the cheese is melted.

7. Remove the baking sheet from the grill, then scatter the tomatoes, pepperoncini and diced onion over the other toppings. Serve immediately.

Ingredients

- 3 tbsp adobo sauce (from a can of chipotle chilies in adobo)
- 3 tbsp tomato paste
- 3 tbsp canola, plus extra
- 1 tsp garlic powder
- 1 tsp kosher salt
- 9 oz beef sirloin, thinly sliced (can substitute pre-sliced "stir-fry" beef)
- 1 ear corn, husked
- 11-oz bag corn tortilla chips
- 1 cup grated cheddar cheese
- 1/2 pint cherry tomatoes, cut into quarters
- 1/3 cup pepperoncini, stemmed and thinly sliced
- 1/2 small red onion, diced

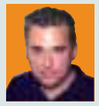
Staple of summertime



LIQUID ASSETS
Peter Rockwell
@therealwineguy
liquidassets@eastlink.ca

Sorry, spirit fans, you don't have the monopoly on mixology. Innovative wine lovers have been adding extras to vino for centuries, creating inspired alternatives to drinking it neat.

The Spanish came up with the idea of sangria: A blend of red wine, liqueur and fruit named after their term for blood because of its dark colour. Arguably the first wine cooler, Canadians are just cluing in to how easy it is to make — not to mention how well it goes with summer menus.

My basic recipe is meant to be played with, so have fun experimenting. Use whatever fruit turns you on (I start with watermelon, blueberries and raspberries) and an inexpensive Spanish red or a value-priced, fruit-forward alternative like Lindeman's juicy 2012 Cawarra Shiraz Cabernet ($8.95 to $10.99) from Australia.

Peter's Simple Sangria:

- Ice cubes
- 750 ml chilled red wine
- 100 ml orange liqueur
- 500 ml gingerale
- 200 ml lemonade
- Fruit
- Sugar

Grab a clear glass pitcher and toss in some ice cubes. Add all the liquids, then the fruit. Stir. Give it a sip and add sugar to taste. Enjoy!

PRICES REFLECT THE RANGE ACROSS THE COUNTRY. SOME PRODUCTS MAY NOT BE AVAILABLE IN ALL PROVINCES.

No mashing required

1. In a large sauté pan, heat 30 ml (2 tbsp) of the oil. Add ground beef, red pepper and onion and cook over medium heat until meat is almost fully cooked.

Ingredients

- 250 ml (1 cup) vegetable oil
- 225 g (1/2 lb) ground beef
- 1/2 each red pepper, onion cut in medium dice
- 5 ml (1 tsp) cumin
- 10 ml (2 tsp) dried oregano
- 5 ml (1 tsp) paprika
- Chili flakes and salt, to taste
- 4 russet potatoes, crinkle cut or thinly sliced
- 250 ml (1 cup) grated cheddar cheese
- 1/2 tomato cut in medium dice
- 125 ml (1/2 cup) chopped cilantro
- Sour cream, salsa and guacamole

2. Add cumin, oregano, paprika and chili flakes and continue cooking for 2 minutes; set aside.

3. In sauté pan, heat remaining vegetable oil over medium-high heat. When oil is hot, fry potato slices until crispy. Remove from oil, drain on paper towels and season with salt.

4. Lay potato chips overlapping in a single layer on a baking pan lined with parchment paper. Top with ground beef mixture and cheddar cheese; bake in a 180 C (350 F) oven until cheese is melted.

5. Remove from oven and top with tomato and cilantro. Serve with a side of sour cream, salsa and guacamole.

Kovalchuk walks away from deal with Devils

NHL. Russian sniper retires to return home; 12 years, $77M left on big contract

Ilya Kovalchuk is retiring from the NHL after just the third year of his 15-year $100-million contract. GETTY IMAGES FILE

When the New Jersey Devils signed Ilya Kovalchuk to a contract that eventually became a 15-year deal worth $100 million US, it stunned the NHL.

But that was nothing compared to Kovalchuk's decision to retire and walk away from the final 12 years and $77 million of it.

Kovalchuk's announcement Tuesday to return home to Russia came several months after the superstar considered staying there in the wake of the NHL lockout. The 30-year-old said in a statement that he has thought for a long time about moving home for good.

"Though I decided to return this past season, (general manager Lou Lamoriello) was aware of my desire to go back home and have my family there with me," Kovalchuk said. "The most difficult thing for me is to leave the New Jersey Devils, a great organization that I have a lot of respect for, and our fans that have been great to me."

Kovalchuk had 417 goals and 399 assists in 816 games over 11 NHL seasons spent with the Atlanta Thrashers and Devils. He was the first overall pick of the Thrashers in 2001 and was a face of that franchise before being traded to New Jersey in 2010.

"After many conversations with Ilya over the past year on his desire to retire from the National Hockey League, Ilya's decision became official today," Lamoriello said in a statement. "On behalf of the entire organization, I wish Ilya and his family all the best in their future endeavours."

Kovalchuk is free to play in Russia's Kontinental Hockey League and reports from Russian news agencies indicated he will officially sign with SKA St. Petersburg on Friday.

Kovalchuk's original deal with the Devils was for 17 years and $102 million. It was ruled cap circumvention by the NHL because Kovalchuk would have been 44 years old when it was over.

The Devils must forfeit their 2014 first-round pick as punishment for the circumvention after they opted to keep their selections in 2012 and 2013. They will also be charged $250,000 against the salary cap through 2024-25 as a result of Kovalchuk's retirement.

The rest of the nearly $6.7-million hit will come off New Jersey's cap. The Devils lost winger David Clarkson in free agency but re-signed Patrik Elias and Dainius Zubrus earlier this off-season.

Tour de France

Kittel beats Cavendish to line for Stage 12 win

Marcel Kittel overtook Mark Cavendish at the line to win the 12th stage of the Tour de France on Thursday, while Chris Froome avoided a late crash to protect his big lead.

Cavendish attacked first but Kittel's late burst got him to the finish first by half a wheel to earn his second stage win in three days, and third of this race.

"As we say in Germany, good things come in three," Kittel said. "It was a real sprint today, that's why I'm so happy."

German riders have won five stages so far — with Tony Martin winning Wednesday's time trial and Andre Greipel also winning a sprint stage.

Jeter makes his return to Yankees

Derek Jeter was back, and the New York Yankees felt a whole lot better.

At least until he needed to make an early exit.

The Yankees captain singled on his first pitch of the season, then was pulled for a pinch-hitter in the eighth inning with a tight right quadriceps in an 8-4 victory Thursday over the Kansas City Royals.

"It's just stiff," he said. "We'll find out tomorrow."

Jeter scored a run and went 1-for-4 with an RBI groundout as the designated hitter in his return from a nine-month layoff from a broken ankle.

Indians rookie pitcher mows down Blue Jays

Expected to contend this season in the AL East, Toronto was held to two hits by rookie Danny Salazar — making his big-league debut — and the Blue Jays lost 4-2 to the Cleveland Indians on Wednesday.

After winning 11 straight, the Blue Jays have gone 6-11 and remain stuck in last place in arguably baseball's toughest division.

"We're around that edge," manager John Gibbons said. "We've got to start winning some games."

R.A. Dickey's knuckleball can be puzzling. Same for the Blue Jays.

Dickey (8-10) was in control for five innings, but the right-hander lost command of his tricky pitch in the sixth, when he hit a batter, walked two and gave up an RBI single to Lonnie Chisenhall. A year ago at the All-Star break, Dickey was 12-1 and on his way to winning the NL Cy Young Award.

This season, he's never been dominant and has only recently been effective.

"The last four or five weeks I've really felt good," Dickey said. "I've had one rough start in there, but other than that I've really been good as far as the way I've felt. I anticipate a pretty strong (second) half."

Salazar pitched six superb innings — he held Toronto without a hit for the first five — allowing just one run.

CFL. Club looking for a well-balanced attack in tilt against Tiger-Cats

Winnipeg Blue Bombers coach Tim Burke is looking for his offence to click this weekend after a couple of uninspiring starts where the defence managed to shine brighter.

"I wasn't happy with their performance on the first days of practice but the last two days have been much better," Burke said on Thursday. "This is hopefully a game where we break out of our slump."

The Bombers (1-1) will meet the Hamilton Tiger-Cats (0-2) on Saturday in Guelph, Ont.

The defence was the cog that kept the wheels spinning in their first win of the season in Montreal last week. Turnovers and sacks sapped the momentum of quarterback Buck Pierce.

"If you have mistakes you've got to put them behind you and move forward."

Gary Crowton, the Blue Bombers' offensive co-ordinator

The official count was five sacks but offensive co-ordinator Gary Crowton says it was really only three.

"Two of those sacks were the run plays where the back went the wrong way or the quarterback on the exchange fumbled, so they count those as sacks," he said. "Any time the quarterback gets a loss, they count it as a sack."

But five is what's on the record books and he says they have to live with that.

"It is what it is," Crowton said. "This week we're really focused on our technique. We've got a lot of ways to protect where we can mix it up sometimes." THE CANADIAN PRESS

Lions-Eskimos

Jackson's long wait almost over

Paris Jackson has no difficulty remembering the last time he started a CFL game.

It was in 2009.

Barring any unforeseen changes, he will finally start at slotback again Saturday as his B.C. Lions visit the Edmonton Eskimos.

Paris Jackson COURTESY CFL

"Man, I've been waiting for that for three years," Jackson, an 11-year veteran who has spent his entire career with the Lions, said after a practice this week.

"I'll be very emotional."

He is slated to replace Shawn Gore, who suffered a head injury in last week's win over Toronto.

In the past four seasons, Jackson, 32, has battled negative perceptions about his age and speed. The Vancouver native's career was first derailed by a wonky knee, before Lions general manager Wally Buono launched a youth movement in the receiving corps. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Lefty in the mix at Scottish Open

Phil Mickelson eased back into links golf with a 6-under 66 at the Scottish Open, leaving him behind two Englishmen after a low-scoring first round on Thursday.

John Parry, ranked No. 471, held the clubhouse lead after a bogey-free 64 and Simon Khan (65) also tamed the Castle Stuart course in perfect morning conditions in the Scottish Highlands to finish alone in second.

Mickelson is tied for third with six others after quickly hitting his stride in the warmup event for next week's British Open, finding his range on and around the greens to produce six birdies and an eagle.

Only 14 of the 78 players setting out in the morning session finished over par, and 117 of the 156-man field broke par. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Pursuit. Site connects athletes with dreams

Some Canadian athletes are funding the pursuit of their Olympic dreams by giving away mementos, experiences and their own time in exchange for money.

Signed race bibs and equipment, snowboard and diving lessons, personal phone calls, hand-knitted tuques, face-to-face meetings and social media "shoutouts" are on offer.

The website Pursuit — designed and operated by a pair of former athletes — is the platform for this exchange.

The website blends elements of online shopping for unique items or experiences. Each athlete's story is told in video and print.

They state their financial goal and why they need the money. Each athlete's financial campaign has a 60-day limit.

Olympic biathlete Megan Imrie of Falcon Lake, Man., was well on her way to her goal of $10,000 with over a month to go.

The athletes on Pursuit offer items and access to their lives on a scale reflecting the size of the donation.

So for a $20 donation, Imrie will send e-mail postcards during training and competition next season.

A package of a personal telephone call, an autographed card and regular e-mail updates goes for $100.

For $1,000, Imrie will package a pair of signed skis, bindings and a race bib together for the donor.

Imrie's family operates Falcon Beach Ranch, so her big-ticket offering is a two-night stay at the resort for a $5,000 donation.

"People are holding onto the money more these days," Imrie says. "They want something back and it has to be creative.

"You can't just say 'this is my dream, please support it' and then that's the last they hear from you. The giveback part of it, to some people it doesn't matter, but to a lot it does. They can feel involved in my journey and feel they've got something for their money." THE CANADIAN PRESS

Horoscopes

♈ Aries
March 21 - April 20
You are not usually the trusting sort but you seem determined to see only the best in people today. Good for you but don't believe everyone.

♉ Taurus
April 21 - May 21
You have so much work to finish before the weekend that you may be at a loss to know how to get it all done. Don't worry, the planets will provide. All you have to do is make a start and then keep going.

♊ Gemini
May 22 - June 21
Wherever you go and whatever you do today people will greet you like a long lost friend. You must be doing something right to get this kind of response, so carry on.

♋ Cancer
June 22 - July 23
It seems you have been rather obsessive about someone. For some reason you have been thinking about this person night and day. Is that healthy? Probably not. Think about something else.

♌ Leo
July 24 - Aug. 23
Friends will rally around and make life easy for you today. What have you done to deserve this kind of assistance? Probably nothing much but you do have a knack for attracting people.

♍ Virgo
Aug. 24 - Sept. 23
It might be wise to leave your credit card at home today because if you use it once you won't know when to stop. Use cash only and limit yourself to a certain amount. If you haven't got enough, too bad.

♎ Libra
Sept. 24 - Oct. 23
People you do business with today may not be talkative but from the look in their eyes and the way they position themselves, you will know what they are thinking. You read body language so well.

♏ Scorpio
Oct. 24 - Nov. 22
It's good to be open-minded but that does not mean you can allow people with silly theories to waste your time. The Sun in Cancer promotes broader thinking but some thinking is too outrageous to take seriously.

♐ Sagittarius
Nov. 23 - Dec. 21
No matter how vulnerable you may feel at the moment, you need to be around people because it is only through personal contact that you can rise above this negative phase.

♑ Capricorn
Dec. 22 - Jan. 20
Make a point of being calm today because what happens over the weekend will try your patience to the limit.

♒ Aquarius
Jan. 21 - Feb. 19
You are desperate to be on the move and will be impatient with people who think or act too slowly. Your journey will be a lot more pleasant if you relax and stop looking at your watch so often. Time doesn't matter.

♓ Pisces
Feb. 20 - March 20
If you are confused about something, you must speak up. There is nothing wrong in admitting that you don't "get" it and it's unlikely you are the only one. You will be doing people a favour. SALLY BROMPTON
